Connecticut Innovations' (CI) president sees opportunities for growth in 2007 for the technology sector, especially in the areas of consumer, media, business applications and financial services. Frank Dinucci recently became president of CI and he will share CI's plan for its aggressive posture towards investing in technology this year. Mr. Dinucci's thirty plus year career in finance has covered the waterfront of institutional investor, portfolio management, investment banking, and venture capital and even as an entrepreneur.

Company presentations will follow by chief executive officers, Joseph O'Connell of Cirrata, Inc., and Allen DeGraw of Post-N-Track Corporation. These two technology companies, at different stages of development, share a common success factor in that they secured a critical component, namely capital, to develop and grow their businesses. Each company story will help you appreciate what it takes to be entrepreneurial in the technology sector and what it takes to start and build a company.

Cirrata, founded in 2003 and based in Stamford, has combined enterprise grade applications that provide micro, mid-size as well as enterprise size businesses with the ability to access, manage, share and protect critical data in a convenient and affordable package. The package gives SMBs enterprise-grade tools which have only been available to date through high-cost custom and hosted solutions.

Post-N-Track[®] creates, deploys and manages a new generation of solutions for the healthcare industry that improves online service delivery, transactional efficiency and information visibility. The company's Doodad[®] and Doohickey[™] web services and web tools enable real-time, direct "posting" and "tracking" of ANY transactions and information among and between payers, healthcare providers, billing entities, banks, employers and other trading partners of ANY size. Founded in Middletown, CT in 2002, the company is relocating in March 2007 to a larger facility in Wethersfield, CT.

Thomas Flynn, a partner at Shipman & Goodwin, will moderate.
